5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO.US

ANNA HÄRSTEDT, STAFF WRITER

Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg was hospitalized early Thursday morning after fracturing three ribs during a fall in her office Wednesday night. She may be the oldest Supreme Court justice but she's also the toughest one. Ginsburg doesn't give up that easily; she has broken ribs before but refused to take any time off. Let's hope she'll take it easy and recover quickly this time. Read about RBG on pages 6-7 and at metro.us.

EX-MARINE ACTED ALONE IN BAR SHOOTING

1 A former U.S. Marine combat veteran opened fire in a Los Angeles area bar and dance hall filled with college students, killing 12 people in a mass shooting that stunned a Southern California community with a reputation for safety. The gunman, identified by police as 28-year-old Ian David Long, was found dead of an apparent self-inflicted gunshot wound following the Wednesday night massacre at the Borderline Bar and Grill in Thousand Oaks, a suburb 40 miles northwest of Los Angeles, law enforcement officials said. Paul Delacourt, assistant director in charge of the Los Angeles FBI, told a news conference that it was too early to speculate on the gunman's motives but that he appeared to have acted alone. "We will be sure to paint a picture of the state of mind of the subject and do our best to identify a motivation," Delacourt said, adding that the FBI would investigate any possible "radicalization" or links to militant groups. Long opened fire seemingly at random inside the Western-themed bar at about 11:30 p.m. PST, using a .45 caliber Glock handgun equipped with a high-capacity magazine, Ventura County Sheriff Geoff Dean said.

TRUMP AIDE FRIENDSHIP SPARKS AG RECUSAL TALK

2 President Donald Trump's pick for acting attorney general, Matt Whitaker, is a close friend of Trump's 2016 election campaign co-chair, and a former government ethics chief has said the friendship makes Whitaker unable to oversee impartially a politically charged investigation into the campaign. Matthew Whitaker, named on Wednesday to replace Jeff Sessions, will directly oversee Special Prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation into possible links between Trump's campaign team and Russian officials. Whitaker publicly criticized Mueller's investigation before he was hired as Sessions' chief of staff last year. Sam Clovis, who was co-chair of Trump's 2016 campaign and has testified before the grand jury in the Mueller investigation, said he and Whitaker became good friends when they ran against each other as Republicans in a 2014 Senate primary campaign in Iowa. Whitaker also later served as the chairman of a Clovis campaign for state treasurer. In an interview with Reuters, Clovis said Whitaker is "a wonderful man" and "a dear friend." He added that Whitaker was a "sounding board" for him when Clovis worked for Trump's campaign.

SATANIC TEMPLE SUES NETFLIX OVER 'SABRINA'

4 The Satanic Temple sued Netflix Inc. and Warner Bros. on Thursday, seeking more than $50 million for their alleged unauthorized use of a statue of the goat-headed deity Baphomet in the series "Chilling Adventures of Sabrina." In a complaint filed with the U.S. District Court, the plaintiff, whose stated mission includes encouraging benevolence and empathy among people rejecting tyrannical authority, accused the defendants of copyright infringement, trademark violations and injury to its reputation. Netflix referred a request for comment to Warner Bros., a unit of AT&T Inc. Warner Bros. spokesman Paul McGuire said that company does not discuss pending litigation. According to the complaint, Netflix, which distributes "Sabrina," and Warner Bros., which produces it, misappropriated the Salem, Massachusetts-based plaintiff's "Baphomet with Children" in ways implying that it "stands for evil." The Satanic Temple, whose formal name is United Federation of Churches LLC, said the statue has appeared in at least four of the first 10 "Sabrina" episodes, which were released on Oct. 26, and was a "key element" of the season finale.

SCHNEIDERMAN WILL NOT FACE CRIMINAL CHARGES

5 Prosecutors said on Thursday they have decided not to bring criminal charges against former New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman, who resigned in May after four women accused him of physical abuse. The decision was announced by Nassau County District Attorney Madeline Singas, who was appointed by New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo to investigate the allegations shortly after Schneiderman's sudden May 7 resignation. Singas said she personally interviewed Schneiderman's accusers and found them credible, but that state law made it impossible to bring criminal charges. "I believe the women who shared their experiences with our investigation team. However legal impediments, including statutes of limitations, preclude criminal prosecution," Singas said in a statement. In a statement on Thursday, Schneiderman apologized "for any and all pain that I have caused," and said that after spending time in a "rehab facility" he was committed to "making amends" to those people he harmed. "I recognize that District Attorney Singas' decision not to prosecute does not mean I have done nothing wrong," he said.

Google plans major expansion in NYC

While Amazon is still deciding where its next headquarters will be, Google is expanding to the West Village.

ANNA HARSTEDT
letters@metro.us

Google is planning to expand its New York City offices to add space that could accommodate more than 12,000 new workers, according to a report from The Wall Street Journal.

If so, the move would bring a total of 20,000 jobs to the city by 2022.

The tech giant is planning to either lease or buy a large office building in the West Village and also expand their office in Chelsea Market. The planned office is a 1.3 million-square-foot building that would accommodate 8,500 workers while the Chelsea Market expansion of 300,000 square feet would accommodate 3,500 workers.

A Google spokeswoman didn't want to comment on the office expansion in the West Village but said Google plans to expand the office in Chelsea Market to include a community space, winter garden and water taxi landing open to the public. The company announced in March that they bought the Manhattan Chelsea Market for $2.4 billion but agreed to keep leasing space in the building to food and retail tenants.

This comes alongside the expected investment by Amazon, which is planning to bring 25,000 employees to Long Island City. The company announced last year that they were searching for a location for its second headquarters that would eventually hold 50,000 workers. They plan to split it evenly between two locations rather than picking one city, halving the potential number of jobs in each city. New York is one of a few finalists being considered by Amazon, along with Dallas and Crystal City in northern Virginia.

"Reports of Google's planned expansion in New York and Amazon potentially choosing Queens as a location for HQ2 confirm that New York City is unmatched in its ability to help innovative companies succeed," Julie Samuels, executive director of Tech:NYC, said in a statement. "Our diverse workforce spurs innovation, and New York's position as the global center for a broad range of industries creates an environment that boosts creative companies."

Christie could reportedly become next AG

Former New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie is reportedly being considered to fill the shoes of former Attorney General Jeff Sessions.

Sessions gave his resignation after being fired by President Trump on Wednesday. While Sessions had been a longtime supporter of Trump and his policies, the two reportedly began bumping heads due to the Mueller investigation.

According to CBS News, sources familiar with the situation have shared that Christie joins the potential pool of candidates that include Florida Attorney General Pam Bondi, Rudy Giuliani, and former Attorney General William Barr, who served under the George H.W. Bush administration from 1991-93.

GETTY IMAGES

The list of potential candidates is expected to increase in the coming days, per CBS News chief White House correspondent Major Garrett.

Questioned about who is being considered for the position of attorney general, Counselor to the President Kellyanne Conway would not comment, but said that there are several candidates in the running. SARAH LUOMA

Support for RBG after breaking three ribs

Brooklyn-born Ruth Bader Ginsburg was wished a quick and complete recovery by New Yorkers.

Ruth Bader Ginsburg, a prominent liberal who at age 85 is the oldest U.S. Supreme Court justice, was hospitalized on Thursday after fracturing three ribs in a fall the night before at her office at the court, a court spokeswoman said.

Ginsburg, appointed in 1993 by former President Bill Clinton as only the second woman to serve on the high court, initially went home after the fall, but experienced discomfort overnight and went to George Washington University Hospital on Thursday morning, court spokeswoman Kathy Arberg said in a statement.

Tests showed Ginsburg fractured three ribs on her left side and she was admitted for observation and treatment, Arberg added. The court is not scheduled to hear its next arguments in cases until Nov. 26.

Even though she has bounced back from previous medical issues, as the oldest justice, Ginsburg is closely watched for any signs of deteriorating health. Ginsburg has fallen twice before at her home, in 2012 and 2013, leading to rib injuries. She was treated in 1999 for colon cancer and again in 2009 for pancreatic cancer, both serious forms of cancer, but did not miss any argument sessions either time.

An advocate for women's rights, Ginsburg is one of the court's four liberals. The court's 5-4 conservative majority was restored last month when the Senate confirmed Republican President Donald Trump's appointee Brett Kavanaugh after a contentious nomination process in which Kavanaugh denied a sexual assault allegation dating to the 1980s.

If Ginsburg were unable to continue serving, Trump likely would move swiftly to replace her with a conservative, further shifting the court to the right. A potentially dominant 6-3 conservative majority would have major consequences for issues including abortion, the death penalty, voting rights, gay rights, religious liberty, business litigation, and presidential powers.

"Women nowadays are not silent about bad behavior."
Ruth Bader Ginsburg

Born in Brooklyn and a graduate of Columbia Law School, Ginsburg has received a lot of support from across the U.S. but particularly her hometown following the hospitalization.

Ginsburg is a hero among many U.S. liberals, sometimes called "The Notorious R.B.G." in a nickname based on the late American rapper The Notorious B.I.G. A documentary film about her, "RBG," was released earlier this year. A biographical film about her, called "On the Basis of Sex" and starring Felicity Jones, is being released next month.

People have been expressing support, love, spells and even offers to donate ribs or other organs from social media.

From Brooklyn Borough President Eric Adams: #Brooklyn wishes our #NotoriousRBG the most speedy of recoveries. She is one of the greatest fighters we have ever produced, and we can't wait to see Justice Ginsburg back on the bench." REUTERS

RBG AND THE GOP

ANALYSIS

TOM FOREMAN

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, the oldest person on the United States Supreme Court, fell this week, and like those stories of telepathically connected twins, Democrats across America winced. Not just because cracking your ribs at the age of 85 is a serious matter, but also because the incident underscores the perilous position of their political viewpoint in the country's highest court.

Of the nine justices, five were chosen by Republican presidents. Only four by Democrats, and they include the two oldest members: RBG and Stephen Breyer, who is 80. You get the picture. The liberal side, which is already at a disadvantage, is also statistically more likely to lose members sooner through retirement, health issues, or death. And each time a progressive justice leaves, a conservative replacement is virtually certain.

It happened with the first two Supreme Court vacancies offered to President Trump. And now that the midterm elections have seen his party tighten its grip on the Senate, the process of approval will likely go even faster. And it's not just the Supreme Court. Team Trump has been pushing conservative judges into federal courts coast-to-coast at a breakneck pace. As I write these words, the federal court system is being packed with so many young conservative judges it could tilt right for decades. Deep control of the Supreme Court is merely the whipped cream on top.

True, when jurists are seated in these lifetime jobs, they don't always follow the rulebook. The model of "who's on the left and who's on the right" is imperfect. But it works often enough to give Democrats the shivers when a rock star for their side takes a tumble. RBG is a hero in Democratic communities. The second woman on the court has proven to be a lion for women's rights, and an icon of progressive intellect and toughness. She is the keystone in a fragile, legal bulwark against what many Dems consider a wave of conservative tyranny.

She's also in the hospital. And considering the stakes, I can only imagine Democrats everywhere ordering flowers and sending cards that read: "Get well soon. We need you."

Today, we have a special guest Grumble from Metro Features Editor Matt Juul. You could say he has a bone to pick with cyclists who choose not to follow the rules of the road. Grumble on, Matt.

BAD BIKERS

Riding a bike instead of driving a gas-guzzling car is admirable for environmental reasons, but cyclists still need to follow the rules of the road. Why don't these people abide by any of the traffic laws? You have to stop at red lights and stop signs like everyone else on the roads, so don't just zoom through the intersection just because you can fit between cars. That's a good way to get run over. Also, cyclists who decide to ride on sidewalks instead of the roads are just the absolute worst. There are bike lanes for a reason. And where are the cops? They'll hand out tickets for cars that break the rules, but you never see a cyclist get pulled over for blowing past red lights. If cities are going to make accommodations for cyclists, the least they can do is follow the rules. — Matt Juul, Metro Features Editor

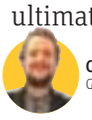
Benedict Cumberbatch plays the Grinch in the latest adaptation of the Dr. Seuss holiday story.

So, why did 'The Grinch' steal Christmas?

Benedict Cumberbatch and co-director Scott Mosier answer the ultimate question.



GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

As the third screen adaptation of the classic 1957 children's book "How the Grinch Stole Christmas," Illumination's "The Grinch" had to be a little bit different.

But "The Grinch" co-director Scott Mosier told Metro that, while he sought to make the film unique by delving into the motivation and backstory of the grumpy green creature that despises Christmas, they still "really started with the book."

"We wanted to start the journey at the beginning and the core emotional truth of the book," says Mosier. "How kindness and empathy can heal and transform people.

"We also knew that being a Grinch, that's not just a character, that's an idea," he adds. "You can be grinchy. You can be described that way. So we knew that we wanted to make a movie that didn't throw that idea completely out of the window because we wanted to be original."

It also helped that, shortly after starting work on "The Grinch," Mosier and his co-director Yarrow Cheney acquired the talents of Benedict Cumberbatch to voice the titular grump. But Cumberbatch is the first to admit that the role came with its own set of challenges.

"It is such a strange way of working, but the way it evolves over time is full of new and interesting challenges," says Cumberbatch. "Clicking back into it when you have so much other stuff, like projects and life, is the biggest thing.

"You are doing so many takes because you are very much covering your bases with animation, you never know which way it was going to be drawn," he adds. "And also they can look at the take and then work that into the animation. It is a combination. They are constantly retrofitting bits that you have done. It can be painstaking, the process, because every frame is filled with so much humor, wit and detail that you have to respond to."

The "Doctor Strange" star says that he did embody his character's grouchy qualities a bit while working on the film.

"The most Grinchy I got was when producers would call up and say, 'The animators have done this. And we really need you to do this in 10 days,'" says Cumberbatch. "Sometimes it would be really short notice and I would be like, 'Guys can't we do this a bit later? I have a holiday. I have another project.' And they were like, 'No, no, no. We have to do this now.'

"That was like a year ago, too, and I was like, 'Come on we have year,'" he adds. "But there's such an amazing amount of work that goes into it. You can see that when you watch it. There might well have been one of those when I was promoting "Strange." In fact, I know there was. But not in the outfit. When I was over there for 'Avengers.'"

Mosier's instinct that Cumberbatch was the only choice to play the Grinch quickly paid off, as he instantly added a richness and depth that allowed the film to explore a different side to the character.

"Benedict has an ability to be funny and give this emotional performance that we haven't seen in a lot of animated movies," says Mosier. "So then you're like, 'Let's go there. He can do this.' We knew he could create the sincerity and emotion that was needed to make those scenes work. Even though he was dressed as a green furry person in a Santa outfit."

"The Grinch" is now in theaters.

NFL Week 10: Bills to cover vs. Sam Darnold-less Jets

MetroBet takes a look at some local Week 10 matchups.

ROBERT CRISCOLA
letters@metro.us

BUFFALO BILLS AT NEW YORK JETS (-7)

In a year where offenses have been more potent than ever, the Jets and the Bills are failing to ride the wave.

Buffalo is dead last in points per game (10.67) and hasn't scored more than 13 since Week 3, while New York has gone three straight without topping 20 points. The betting total (37) tells you all you need to know about the quarterbacking on these two clubs.

However, the state of confusion as to who might start under center for the Bills (Nathan "Pick-Six" Peterman, Derek Anderson, Josh Allen and even Matt Barkley are all under consideration) might actually play into their favor. The 16th-ranked Jets stoppers may not know who to prepare for.

Sam Darnold has been ruled out due to a foot injury, so 39-year-old Josh McCown steps in. He faces a tough Bills defense that's third in passing yards allowed. He and his perimeter talent (or lack thereof) can't be trusted to cover a number this large. Hold your nose and take Buffalo to cover.

THE PICK: BILLS +7

Josh McCown is set to step in for the injured Sam Darnold, which is why you should pick the Bills. GETTY IMAGES

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS (-7) AT TENNESSEE TITANS

The Patriots are a half-point away from having covered in six straight games, but Tennessee represents their toughest road test of the season to date.

Rookie head coach Mike Vrabel deserves a lot of credit for the Titans' 28-14 win on Monday night over the Cowboys. His team looked considerably more polished than Dallas off their respective bye weeks. Now Tennessee returns home, where they've covered in five of their last six. They also tend to play up to their competition, as they're 10-3 in their last 13 against the spread vs. a team with a winning record, per Covers.com.

The Titans have the top-ranked defense in the NFL (17.62 points per game allowed), and Tom Brady may be without Rob Gronkowski once more. New England's offense has been middle-of-the-pack away from home this year, ranking 14th in points per game and 25th in yards per play. Their underrated defense (11th in points per game allowed) may keep Tennessee and their inconsistent offense from engineering the upset, but the Titans should keep this one close.

THE PICK: TITANS +7

DALLAS COWBOYS AT PHILADELPHIA EAGLES (-6.5)

The Eagles should be polished and ready to go against the Cowboys off their bye week, but one would have expected Dallas to play better than they did at home off their bye week with new perimeter weapon Amari Cooper.

All signs are pointing toward the under (43) in this game. Dallas' defense is third by points per game allowed and fifth by yards per play. The Eagles' defense is fifth by points per game allowed and, most importantly when facing Ezekiel Elliott and the Cowboys, second in the NFL at stopping the run. The total has gone under in 13 of the last 17 Cowboys games, including five of their last seven on the road, and the Under has prevailed in seven of the last 10 meetings between these two teams.

Furthermore, eight of the last nine Eagles home games have gone under (average combined score of 31.89, per oddsshark.com). Carson Wentz's crew may emerge victorious, but with points looking like they'll be at a premium, take the Cowboys to cover and strongly consider betting the Under.

THE PICK: COWBOYS +6.5

Could Yankees trade Stanton to bring on Harper?

Regardless of what the New York Yankees say during the early parts of this offseason, they will continuously be linked to free-agent megastar Bryce Harper.

And that speculation won't stop until he's signed and holding up the jersey of another team.

It gained even more traction earlier this week when Harper's agent, Scott Boras, told MLB Network Radio that the 26-year-old right-fielder would be a more-than-capable first baseman.

The Yankees don't have an every-day first baseman, though Luke Voit mashed in his limited stint with the club after being acquired from the St. Louis Cardinals.

Putting Harper at first would allow the Yankees to keep their outfield intact and, most importantly, keep Aaron Judge in right field.

If the Yankees are actually suitors for Bryce Harper (left), would they have to shed the contract of Giancarlo Stanton (right) to make him fit? GETTY IMAGES

Yet the Las Vegas native who grew up a Yankees fan and dreamed of calling the Bronx his home is going to carry a hefty price tag. So hefty, in fact, that it is expected to exceed the $300 million mark after he turned down a 10-year offer for that much from the Washington Nationals, the team he spent the first seven years of his career with.

The Yankees are already paying some incredibly large contracts, including that of Giancarlo Stanton, who was acquired from the Miami Marlins last winter.

He has 10 years left on a 13-year, $325 million contract where he'll be making between $26 million and $32 million every year through the 2028 season.

It remains to be seen if the Yankees want to have a decade more of Stanton's style of play. There is no question that he brings an enormous power surge to an already-offensive lineup. However, he struck out a career-high 211 times and had a difficult postseason that saw him draw the ire of the fan base.

In order to afford Harper, the Yankees might have to explore the option of dealing Stanton, who has a no-trade clause. It is believed, though, that he could waive it if he was offered a move closer to his home of Panorama City, Calif. That would mean a trade to either the Los Angeles Dodgers or Angels.

Getting his deal off the books would not only allow the Yankees to sign Harper and play him every day at first base, but would not break the bank should they pursue big-name pitchers to improve their greatest weakness, the starting rotation.
